Sanders response to today's Supreme Court ruling:

This is a very sad day for all Americans. For the first time in our nation's history, a fundamental and established right bestowed by the Supreme Court on millions of American women has been taken away.

In one fell swoop, the Supreme Court has decided that government has the right to interfere in a woman's private, confidential relationship with her physician, that young women can be forced to bear a child by their parents regardless of whether she is able or willing to carry that child, and that women who have gone through the painful deliberation involved in deciding to terminate a pregnancy can be forced to wait an extra 24 hours before undergoing the procedure. These restrictions represent an outrageous assault by the Bush administration on the rights and autonomy of American women.

As if these restrictions were not bad enough, the Supreme Court has now opened the door to 50 new state laws which will undoubtedly further restrict a woman's fundamental right to choose.

I am deeply concerned about the Bush administration's escalating battle against the rights of women. As is so often the case, the women hit hardest will be young, poor, rural women -- those least able to travel to another state to obtain an abortion.

Justice Blackmun rightly said that he fears "for the darkness as four justices anxiously await the single vote necessary to extinguish the light" of Roe. Indeed, President Bush is ready at the next possible opportunity to appoint a Supreme Court justice who will provide that single vote. I am very proud to be a co-sponsor of the Freedom of Choice Act, which would codify the protections in Roe versus Wade by making them law. It is now up to Congress to see to it that a woman's right to choose is protected. And it is up to the American people to see that we elect a president who will sign that Act into law, once and for all protecting a woman's right to choose.
